Introduction

We created a website to promote ethical awareness and responsibility among the Cal Poly Humboldt community. The recent housing decisions have raised ethical concerns, and our website offers resources for housing, transportation, mental health, and local community services. We believe that these issues, such as food and housing insecurities and environmental impacts like pollution and resource scarcity, are interconnected. Our website aims to provide necessary resources to help address these issues and promote environmental consciousness.

Food

If you don't have reliable access to food, caring about environmental issues may be difficult. On the other hand, food can create many ethical issues such as the welfare of animals used for food, pesticides, labor rights, and human health

Community Resources

Often times, finding an organized space for local community resources can be difficult. On this page, we have collected various resources that community member could find useful

Housing

Lack of housing affects people's ability to give thought to environmental ethics, and there can be many secondary effects to the environment including pollution from human waste and lost habitat from development

Mental Health

Your mental health reflects your environment and your ability to interact with it. Take the time today to reach out.

Local Businesses

From local farms to local handmade items, reduce your carbon footprint with these convenient resources.

Transportation

Cars can have detrimental effects on our atmosphere and contribute to climate change; here are some alternative ideas to get around
