CO-EDITORS

Meredith Conover-Williams, Ph.D.

Meredith Conover-Williams is an Assistant Professor at Humboldt State University in the Department of Sociology. Her research is on gender, sexuality and crime; currently, she is exploring how LGBTQ people experience pushes and pulls toward and away from crime. As a first generation student, and a public sociologist, she works hard to incorporate diversity and social justice into her classrooms as much as her life.

Joshua S. Smith

Joshua S. Smith is a graduate student in Sociology as well as change management coordinator at Humboldt State University. His research interests include the social psychological dimensions of macro structures and inequality particularly within higher education. In particular, he looks at how the different structures that individuals navigate influence their self-views, emotions, perceptions, and behavior.

CO-MANAGING EDITORS

Heather Clark

Heather Clark is a graduate student of Public Sociology with an emphasis in teaching at Humboldt State University. Her research interests include popular culture, mental health, intersectionality, criminology, and social psychology. This video and write-up provide a glimpse into the experiences of students struggling with mental health in higher education.

Jennifer Miles

Jennifer Miles is finishing a master's degree in sociology from Humboldt State University. Her research interests include structural investigations of inequality based on race, gender, sexuality, and class. Her master's thesis looks into the experiences of first-generation, underrepresented, low-income master's students. Jennifer loves to teach and looks forward to a career as an educator.
