

Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities

Volume 5

Article 7

2023

Untitled

Minduni Vidhushika Wijesundera

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.humboldt.edu/rwc>

Recommended Citation

Wijesundera, Minduni (2023) "Untitled," Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities: Vol. 5, Article 7.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.humboldt.edu/rwc/vol5/iss1/7>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at Digital Commons @ Cal Poly Humboldt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Cal Poly Humboldt. For more information, please contact kyle.morgan@humboldt.edu.

Untitled

by Minduni Vidhushika Wijesundera

Humans aren't the only ones who demand war.

The balls of fur on the blue firmament are darkened into a swollen grey,
And seagulls applaud the raging seas as they fly across the battling bay.
The ocean too, asks for more.

The sun is no more tap-dancing by the shore.

The waves' vehemence drives them on, colliding into each other,
As others in line prepare in hurry, ready to take on another.
The merry mood is no more.

Would you dare to ask for more?

Ships are merely tossed paper, losing grasp of control,
As gale encourages the worsening battle, unleashing its complete soul.
The answer is no, and that's for sure.

Turbulent and tempest, a raging fighting roar.

A foamy substance scatters the sight, a sign for all who were gone,
And while the stormy battle continued, they took a second