

Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities

Volume 5

Article 16

2023

Spring Memories

Parker Pierson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.humboldt.edu/rwc>

Recommended Citation

Pierson, Parker (2023) "Spring Memories," Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities: Vol. 5, Article 16.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.humboldt.edu/rwc/vol5/iss1/16>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at Digital Commons @ Cal Poly Humboldt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Celebrating Writers and Writing in our Communities by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Cal Poly Humboldt. For more information, please contact kyle.morgan@humboldt.edu.

Spring Memories

by Parker Pierson

I have always longed for spring,
The icy cold days are coming to an end.

Going outside early in the morning,
The feeling of desolation, almost post-apocalyptic in a way.

Seeing the dew on a blade of grass,
Like a long-lost dream, you never had.

Similar to a light bulb on and off,
Stormy and Sunny.

Gray and white clouds in the sky, reminiscent of a raging storm.
Fierce as a tiger, calm as a sloth.

I often ponder, is this just a faded memory,
Or is this the reality I have always desired?